General information

The H2020 MSCA ETN Network List_MAPS welcomes you to its symposium which will be held in the historic town of Kinsale, on the south coast of Ireland. Contamination of foodstuff by pathogenic microorganisms is a major safety issue and a burden to the food industry. Many routes may lead to food contamination from farm to fork. The symposium will address several facets of the ecology of foodborne pathogens. From basic to applied research, the meeting will welcome microbiologists, system biologists, molecular biologists from both academia and industry interested in the biology of foodborne pathogens and food safety.

This conference is part of the conference satellite meetings organized with the EFB' conference « Microbial Stress: from systems to molecules and back » held from 23 to 25 April: <http://www.efbiotechnology.org/microbialstress/>

Organizing committee

- Dr Pascal Piveteau, UMR Agroecology, University of Burgundy (Chair)
- Cécile Bernard, UMR Agroecology, University of Burgundy (Co-chair)
- Dr Conor O'Byrne, National University of Ireland Galway (Co-chair)

Venue

The conference will be held at the hotel Actons Kinsale in Ireland, known as the « Gourmet Capital of Ireland ». Kinsale is located at 30km from the University College Cork and 20km from the Cork international airport <http://www.actonshotelkinsale.com/en/>

Programme

The meeting will welcome 2 invited speakers and will provide 14 slots for oral presentations for young researchers and experienced researchers.

The symposium will address several facets of the ecology of foodborne pathogens including their intraspecific biodiversity, the mechanisms of biofilm and habitat colonization, regulation processes, GI tract survival and infection throughout the continuum from farmland to the consumer.
